In this chapter, we will introduce some background information and stress the basic principles that will bring context to XiangShu 象數, the symbolism and numerology of each Heavenly Stem and Earthly Branch. Please take your time to review this section before moving on to the rest of the book.

1.1 The Way of Heaven and Earth

TianGan 天干 (Heavenly Stems) and DiZhi 地支 (Earthly Branches) are commonly abbreviated GanZhi 干支. The GanZhi originated in the ancient Chinese cosmological sciences and a complex calendrical system created to codify the patterns of the universe. For thousands of years, small groups of Chinese shaman-kings, sages, scholars, doctors, astronomers, cosmologists, and politicians have used the GanZhi symbols as sacred tools that unlock the fundamental nature of reality. During the Shang Dynasty (1700–1027 BCE—one of the longest running dynasties in China’s history), which marked great advancements in agriculture, astronomy, bronze casting, music, sculpture, and written communication, the Emperors regarded themselves as the sons of
1.1.2 DiZhi 地支 Earthly Branches

Di 地 means earth, ground, terrain, and place; Zhi 支 means the branch or twig of a tree or a plant, support, supply, assist, treat with, defend, or forked area. Zhi 支 can be written as the character 枝, which also means the branch of a plant. DiZhi means “Earthly Branch” and draws to mind the intricate system of branches connected to the giant trunk of TianGan.

Similar to TianGan, DiZhi is a Chinese term that contains a collection of twelve specific Chinese characters: Zi 子, Chou 丑, Yin 寅, Mao 卯, Chen 辰, Si 巳, Wu 午, Wei 未, Shen 申, You 酉, Xü 戌, and Hai 亥. DiZhi represents DiDao 地道, the Way of Earth. DiDao means square, corner, stable, solid, keeping still, and without movement.

Given that the Xiu mark the daily position of the Moon during its monthly orbit around Earth, we find that the Moon resides in a different Lunar Mansion each night. Chinese astronomers observed each quadrant of the sky (found in the four cardinal directions) and found that every seven Mansions form a clear pattern—that of a spiritual animal.

The four spiritual animals are QingLong 青龍, the Green Dragon on the eastern sky, XuanWu 玄武, the Mystical Warrior (turtle and snake) in the north, BaiHu 白虎, the White Tiger to the west, and ZhuQue 朱雀, the southern Red Bird. Table 1 lists the four spiritual animals with their associated Lunar Mansions.
The twelve Earthly Branches are grouped into YinYang pairs of Elements—Yin寅 and Mao are Wood; Si and Wu午 are Fire; Chen, Xü, Chou, and Wei are Earth; Shen and You are Metal; and Hai and Zi are Water.
We provided you with a great deal of the symbolic associations of the GanZhi in Chapters 2 and 3. In this chapter, we will first review the basic Five Elements birth and control principles and then move on to focus on the more complex GanZhi Five Elements alchemical transformation principles. After you give yourself some time to study these essential principles of alchemical processes, you may gain further insight into the information in the previous chapters.

4.1 WuXingXiangSheng 五行相生  Birth Principle

The generating or birth principle is one of the two main relationships that steer the movement of the Five Elements. Each Element is intimately bonded to just one other by this principle. In this cycle, Water nourishes Wood, Wood gives rise to (fuels) Fire, Fire begets (creates, through ash) Earth, Earth produces (bears) Metal, and Metal gives birth to (carries) Water.

The birth relationship between two Elements fluctuates, and can bring either helpful or detrimental effects. Generally speaking, in this “parent–child” dynamic, the child element will drain some amount of energy from its parent element. For example, if the child (Wood) is currently in need of support, the parent (Water) will pour forth its energy in a nourishing way. However, it may happen that the child is currently too strong (for example, an overindulged child) and will not benefit from a cosseting parent. It is also possible that the child is too weak (for example, an excessively timid child who needs to learn independence) to profit from a domineering parent. When Water burdens
